FAMILY EDUCATION

Spontaneous Incentives

Very often, parental attention and praise are all the reinforcement a child needs. However, it can be helpful to combine praise with a hands-on reward, especially if the child has worked hard to learn a new skill or behavior.

You are invited to join us for a discussion about identifying positive behaviors, the value of unexpected rewards, and understanding small steps. As part of The Incredible Years® program, learn the difference between rewards and bribes and that what will reinforce one child will not necessarily reinforce another.

Who should attend?

Caregivers of children ages 1 to 5
